

Half asleep the other night I thought about Julian Assange in his little room at Hans Crescent, London Occupying an Equatorial Embassy; balanced in the center somewhat but the center swung out of center

closer to Greenwich Time the legacy of a lost empire

What internet service provider do the Ecuadorians use?
Sky, TalkTalk, Plusnet, Virgin Media, Orange, BT
Does he get good download speeds, how's the upload threshold? Can he stream himself in real time?
I feel for him, I hope his wi-fi is good enough

I get his news from Russia Today Online regarding South American power in the face of the Anglo-American process, some Swedish morality play and wars in the Middle East, an Australian all the same

Does he get bored in that little room with a treadmill and sunlamp? http:// www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-2189749/Threadbare-room-inside-Ecuadorian-embassy-Julian-Assange-hiding.html

With virtual light and running going nowhere Left alone to old thoughts, becoming overly aware of internal networks electrical impulses moving over worn synapses seeking new connections

Wikipedia tells me we are the 'Echo-boomer' generation So what do we do - stand in the street? But come on, really?
My street oscillates between image search and my Facebook feed
We have two satellites orbiting Mars, sending back HD video from the alien surface So how do we leverage this 2D surface into a real world effect?
Harness our technology to watch ourselves all of this documentation dispersed looking out the window into a kind of commons

Back at Hans Crescent the Saudi Royal Family occupies the apartments above Do they have their new neighbor over for coffee? Imagine the brunch conversation about their wars and his part to play streamed videos of helicopter views desert dust and digital distortion but a kind of clarity for us all